

Projectile Points

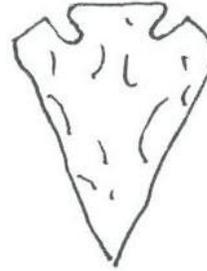

Weapons and tools made from stone were basic to the survival of early Indians. Projectile points, commonly called arrowheads, were the most common stone tools. Small and thin points were used as arrow tips. Larger projectile points were used as knives or as tips for spears. Points were made differently according to time period and purpose. Below are some common styles of points.

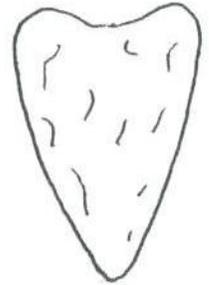

BIFURIGATED

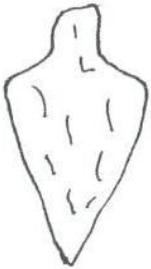

WEDGE TAILED

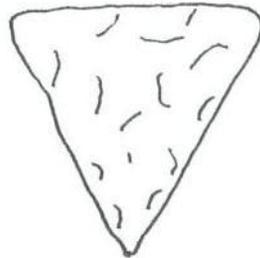

SQUARE BARBED

LANCEOLATE WITH INCURVATE BASE

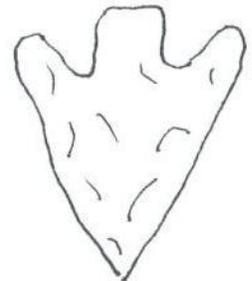

STEMMED AND SHOULDERS

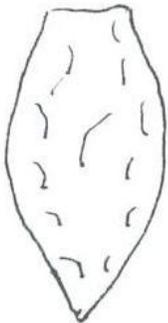

TRIANGULAR

SERRATED

STEMMED AND BARBED

BROADSTEMMED

SQUARE TAILED

DOVE TAILED

LEAF

Draw one of the points above on this spear.

